8 accused of staging car wreck

by SHELDON COMPTON
STAFF WRITER

LONDON — Eight Floyd Countians were indicted in federal court yesterday on charges of conspiracy and mail fraud.

A grand jury in London indicted the eight Floyd natives for allegedly arranging a staged automobile collision in order to collect insurance payments.

Junior Little (also known as Bailey), Luther Johnson Jr., Robin D. Shumaker, Dannie Lee Bentley, Green Berry Newman (also known as G.B.), Troy L. Fields, Burnett Little and James Clarence Hall each received one count each of conspiracy.

Newman, Little, Bentley, Fields and Shumaker were also charged with additional counts of mail fraud for allegedly using the postal service to deliver mail for the purpose of furthering the alleged scheme.

According to the federal indictment, the eight agreed to cause damage to insured vehicles owned or otherwise driven by others within the alleged conspiracy.

The indictments claims they would then file claims and make false statements to law enforcement, insurance companies and medical personnel regarding the circumstances surrounding the accidents and their injuries. Those directly involved on a given accident claim would then agree to share the money with others in the group of eight, according to federal prosecutors.

Specifically, the indictments alleges that on June 18, 2006, Little, Johnson RACCOON — A woman reported missing was found less than nine hours after state police sent notifications of her disappearance to local media outlets.

Geraldine Watson, 45, of Raccoon in Pike County, was reported missing to state police around noon Sept. 16 by family members.

At that time investigators started the search, saying shortly afterwards that no leads had been uncovered as to her whereabouts.

A photograph was sent Wednesday along with a press release to local news stations, which aired Watson's disappearance that evening.

Kentucky State Police spokesman Mike Goble notified the media through a press release at approximately 9 p.m. the same day that Watson had been found and had not been harmed. Goble said the tip that led to her being discovered came from a caller who had seen the broadcast about the Raccoon resident.

Further details were not released explaining the circumstances the led to Watson going missing.

PRESTONSBURG — The mood was one of celebration at a special called meeting of the Floyd County Board of Education at Prestonsburg Elementary on Wednesday.

The meeting was called in order to discuss the districts assessment based on the 2009 No Child Left Behind and the KCCT Interim Performance Reports, with Floyd County moving from a state rank of 66 to a rank of 57 out of 175 districts.

"I'm very proud to say that our district continues to make progress," said Supt. Henry Webb. "We want to celebrate the work that is taking place in the schools and the accomplishments made over the past year. I hold the expectation for consistent improvement so that we may better educate the children of Floyd County."

The principals from each school were present at the meeting and addressed the board and those in attendance concerning the scores and each schools plans for improvement.

May Valley Elementary was once again named as the top elementary school in the state, and May Valley and Duff Elementary also rank number one for elementary social studies.

"Although we are experiencing wonderful success academically, the teachers and administration at May Valley are

Feds file complaint against Pike man

by SHELDON COMPTON
STAFF WRITER

PIKEVILLE — The Pike County man arrested locally at the beginning of this week saw a federal complaint and warrant brought against him in connection with the case Thursday.

An arrest warrant was issued Wednesday through U.S. District Court in Pikeville against Darrel J. Swiney, 37, of Wolf Belcher Road at Shelby Gap, on charges of conspiracy to distribute and possession with intent to distribute oxycodone.

The complaint and arrest warrant came through federal channels following a sworn affidavit from Kentucky State Police Det. James R. Hunter, a member of KSP's Drug Enforcement and Special Investigation Office.

Local law enforcement, including Det. Hunter, conducted a search of Swiney's home this past week and recovered more than 750 oxycodone and Oxycodone tablets, a stolen dirt bike and more than $6,500 in cash. Also taken into evidence from a nearby residence and now linked to Swiney were three ATVs that police later discovered had been reported as stolen.

The investigation into Swiney was a four-month long process, according to

by JARRID DEATON
FEATURES WRITER

STANVILLE — Eric C. Conn's video campaign to attract the attention of President Barack Obama in an attempt to be appointed to the Social Security Advisory Board is now online, and features bluegrass legend Ralph Stanley, Amber "Obama Girl" Ettinger and "The Dancing Outlaw" Jesco White.

The video features an altered version of "Man of Constant Sorrow" with Ralph Stanley opening over for the remainder of the video by lip-synching the lyrics that are sung by a female vocalist. White is shown doing his famous clog dancing in some of the scenes.

The song features lyrics such as, "I know a man who'll help Obama, a superhero without a cape. His name is Eric C. Conn, he learned Spanish off of a tape."

Heavy rainfall on May 9 opened up an old break in Route 1086 at Sizemore Hill that had been repaired several years ago. The new break was worse and caused officials from Highway District 12 to close the road. Repair work was completed last week by Mountain Enterprises and the road is now open to all traffic. Matthew Moore, Prestonsburg section engineer for Highway District 12, said the old break was fixed several years ago with railroad steel. "The break failed because suitable bedrock was not found within the limits of the railroad steel. The maximum depth for railroad steel is 39 feet," Moore explained that this time crews excavated the failed material and backfilled the break with rock that fits the structural need. The amount of the contract was $156,155.

Good reason to be cautious

According to statewide news outlets, doctors' offices in Kentucky have been flooded with patients fearing the effects of what is now called Type A flu, but more commonly known as swine flu or H1N1. As cooler weather is set to blanket the Commonwealth in the coming weeks and with the revelation of a confirmed case in Perry County, it behooves us all to keep in mind that the spread of any type of influenza is preventable in most cases, often times with the simplest common sense practices.

Kentucky's Department for Public Health notes that the easiest way to prevent the contraction of the flu virus is simply to obtain a vaccination. Seasonal flu shots are already available in the local health department, and the swine flu vaccine should hit the market in the coming weeks.

There are other ways to help prevent the contraction or spread of the influenza virus. Simply washing your hands and, if you do contract the flu, stay at home and avoid others until your symptoms disappear and avoid touching your face, nose, eyes, and mouth during the duration of the illness.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, about 200,000 people are affected by seasonal flu each year, accounting for 36,000 deaths annually in the United States. And now national media outlets have reported that an estimated 90,000 people could die from the swine flu alone this year. In the face of those numbers, there is reason to be cautious and practice good hygiene, but there is even more reason to get vaccinated. The vaccines are usually inexpensive, locally available, and could mean the difference between becoming quite ill or continuing a flu-free existence until next year.

In this day and age it seems that there is an infinite number of diseases to contract, so it makes sense that while both the seasonal and swine flu vaccines will only control two of those copious amounts of illnesses, that's two you don't have to worry about.

PRESIDENT OBAMA'S TV TOUR CONTINUES...

Beyond the Beltway

The degrading of debate

by DONALD KAUL
MINUTEMAN MEDIA

I don't understand why people are criticizing Rep. Joe Wilson for shouting out "You lie" during President Barack Obama's speech to Congress last week. He has been denounced as rude, vulgar and worse. The House of Representatives has censured him. One liberal commentator even went so far as to call him an American.

Nonsense, I say. Calling the president a liar is as American as protesting a war or burning the flag. The First Amendment to the Constitution gives every American the right to speak his mind, no matter how boorish, ignorant, and puerile that mind may be. Wilson, under pressure from his colleagues, recanted his action but he didn't seem very contrite. His constituents, on the other hand, loved it.

"I'm proud of my congressman," said one typical South Carolinian. And Rush Limbaugh endorsed his behavior, which, for a Republican, is like a Catholic getting a "well done" from the Pope.

It's not always easy for a politician to stand up for the right of every American to be as dumb as he wants to be, but someone's got to do it. It's the price we pay for freedom. The next time a protester stands up during a congressional debate on Iraq or Afghanistan and yells "Stop the war!" I'm sure that Mr. Wilson will rush to his or her defense, on principle.

Obama's speech was pretty good I thought, but the reaction of the Republicans in the Chamber is what was priceless. They sat there looking like a group of sullen schoolboys being lectured on deportment by their headmaster.

They apparently were afraid to applaud any of the president's statements lest Limbaugh was watching. Sen. Lindsey Graham, another South Carolina Republican, was about to applaud once but caught himself and changed in mid-clap to a rubbing together of the hands, as though he were playing Pontius Pilate in a community passion play.

The Republicans seem determined to oppose everything Obama suggests, down to the announcement of National Doughnut Week. This, they think, will lead them back to power. They obviously have forgotten what they did with the power when they had it — lead us into two awful wars and bring the economy to the edge of disaster — and they're counting on the American people to do the same.

Maybe it will work. Nobody ever went broke underestimating the collective memory of the American people. However, let us consider for a moment the recent past:

It was Republicans who thrust us into the jaws of economic collapse and Obama who rescued us. Do the Republicans admit that? No. Does Obama get any credit for it? No. Instead, he gets complaints about bailouts, orchestrated protests against the deficit, angry people shouting down proponents of health care reform.

Had John McCain won the election with a Republican majority in Congress, the deficit would be even higher and unemployment twice what it is now.

The Republicans did not and do not have a single idea for fixing things beyond cutting spending and hoping for the best. That's what Herbert Hoover did in the 1930s. How'd that work out, anyway?

I'm getting worried about the country. All of this turmoil we're having is neither healthy nor natural. It is hysteria reminiscent of the days of McCarthyism when to disagree with the Right was to be labeled a Communist. Moreover, there's a sense of violence in the air, with people appearing at political rallies carrying guns, both pro- and anti-abortionists getting murdered and protesters carrying threatening signs.

You know, virtually every controversial American leader for the past 150 years has been shot at, often fatally. Lincoln, both Kennedy brothers, Martin Luther King, Ronald Reagan and Teddy Roosevelt all took bullets, while Franklin D. Roosevelt was fired upon.

It's the American way. There are way too many nuts out there with guns and the Republican idea of fun is to stir them up.

Very worried.

Job Corps to be commended

I would like to take this moment to commend the students and staff at the Perkins Job Corps Center for their excellent work these past few weeks.

Over the course of the last several days, the Corps has gone above and beyond what our community has needed. On 9/11, over 50 students and staff participated in a PRIDE Roadside cleanup which netted over 120 bags of trash along our busy streets and back roads.

The next day, the Corps helped to organize a Prestonsburg Marathon for Faithrunners. This event helped to (1) bring awareness to colon cancer, (2) raise funds for research and screening, and (3) create a new event which draws dollars and tourists to our area.

The Corps also helped with event planning and security at the Highland Folk Festival with Prestonsburg Tourism this past weekend which realized at least 1000 visitors to the area.

Thomas Rainey and his staff should be proud of the work they are doing with the youth in our area. They are teaching them a valuable lesson about life and also how to be future leaders. The job and social skills learned there will serve them well in future endeavors.

I would like to encourage everyone to visit their facility and see what they have built there with their own hands. You would be amazed and very proud of this organization. It just goes to show what people can do when they have a positive attitude and then work together to accomplish a very worthy goal.

Rice to call UFL games on HDNet

TIMES STAFF REPORT

HDNet will broadcast the inaugural season of the United Football League (UFL) with five prime time national games beginning Oct. 10. The versatile Kenny Rice will call play-by-play with former pro star and veteran TV analyst Paul Maguire.

Rice, a Floyd County native, has called a dozen sports since joining HDNet in 2003, including college football and basketball. He is the host of the top-rated Inside MMA, a weekly look at mixed martial arts.

Maguire played in six American Football League championship games with the San Diego Chargers and Buffalo Bills. He is known for his candor and humor in the booth.

"Kenny and Paul are the perfect team," said HDNet Executive Producer Darrell Ewalt. "They know football cold and their combined wit brings another dimension to each telecast. We will incorporate their talents on a half-hour pregame show as well."

The UFL on HDNet will shape up as follows: Oct. 10—New York at Florida; Oct. 17—New York at San Francisco; Oct. 30—Las Vegas at Florida; Nov. 14—Las Vegas at San Francisco; Nov. 20—New York at Los Angeles. Kickoff is set for 7 p.m. ET for each game.

HDNet is owned by Mark Cuban and available in Eastern Kentucky on cable systems and satellite providers.

In addition to his duties with UFL and the MMA programming this year, Rice will call two of college basketball's most prestigious events — the Legends Classic from Atlanta City Nov. 27-28 featuring Mississippi State and Florida and the Wooden Classic from Anaheim Dec. 12 featuring UCLA and Mississippi State.

Panthers have history on their side

by RICK BENTLEY
TIMES COLUMNIST

We've got a few things to hit this week, so let's get to it. I wrote my first sports story in February of 1988. I've been doing this a while. I've seen a lot of things in my time, covered a lot of big events.

I've never seen a time when I felt the need to write about a football game between Allen Central and Pikeville, but that's the case this year. Allen Central visits the Panthers tonight in a game that will determine the winner of the district and therefore the top seed in the playoffs.

Before we move on, a few one-liners about tonight, courtesy of the KHSAA Web site:

— Allen Central stands a perfect 4-0 on the season.

— Pikeville enters tonight's game (gulp) 1-3.

— The Rebels have outscored their opponents 158-49, meaning an average score of 49.5 to 12.3.

— The Panthers have been outscored 165-76, which is an average of 41.3 for the other team, 19 for them.

— Pikeville only win was a 48-

14 decision over Phelps. Remove that from the totals and the Panthers are averaging a loss to the tune of 50.3 to 9.3.

Now, we reviewed all that to get around to asking one simple, basic question: Why do I think this is at least a pick 'em game? Why can't I see that Allen Central is the better team by the numbers and should get the win, maybe even fairly easily?

There's one single, solitary reason for that. In the entire history of Rebel football, they have never — not once — beaten Pikeville.

Now I've pointed this out before and I've been told, "They should have beaten them last year and let it get away." Which, honestly, goes further toward proving my point than theirs. The Rebels should have beaten the Panthers last year. They had them beat.

Yet Pikeville won anyway.

So what will happen tonight?

We'll see.

Blackcats rout Jackson City

by STEVE LEMASTER
SPORTS EDITOR

JACKSON — The Prestonsburg High School boys' soccer team won its third straight game on Saturday, defeating host Jackson City 8-0. Prestonsburg improved to 7-1 after claiming the victory.

Caleb Perry led Prestonsburg offensively as he scored a match-high four goals. Brad Stanley was another leading offensive player for the Blackcats. Stanley was one successful shot behind Perry in the scoring column, finishing with three goals. Devin Clifton contributed one goal for Prestonsburg in the road win.

Stanley dealt out a match-high three assists for the Blackcats. Kyle Gearheart added two assists for Prestonsburg in the non-region contest. Perry and Searls recorded one assist each for the Blackcats.

Prestonsburg goalkeeper held Jackson City scoreless in an impressive defensive performance.

Prestonsburg 9, Pike County Central 1: Brad Stanley and Caleb Perry scored three goals apiece as Prestonsburg defeated host Pike County Central 9-1 Thursday, Sept. 17. Jeff Searls, Kyle Gearheart and Logan Hunt provided one goal each for the Blackcats.

Goalkeeper Logan Hunt aided Prestonsburg defensively en route to the region win.

GIRLS' SOCCER — The host Pikeville Lady Panthers defeated Prestonsburg 10-0 Monday evening in a 16th Region girls' soccer game.

Prestonsburg sweeper Clara Osborne also handles all goal kicks and deep free kicks for the Blackcats.

Prestonsburg midfielder Chelsea Hereford and Pikeville player Frankie Dawahare were poised for action.

Bellarmine finishes seventh in Great Lakes Invitational

TIMES STAFF REPORT

SOUTH HAVEN, Mich. — The Bellarmine University men's golf team shot a 36-hole total of 586 to finish in seventh place in the 24-team Great Lakes Region Invitational held at HawksHead Golf Links on Sept. 20 and 21. The Knights were led by the freshman tandem of David Shearn and Bryan Ratterman, who both finished in a tie for 16th at 145 (+1). Wayne State University, which was tied with Bellarmine at 291 after the first round, blistered the Arthur Hills designed layout with team score of 282 (-6) in today's final round to win the team title with a 573 total. Northern Kentucky University's Danny Lewis was medalist with at -9 (135). Bellarmine's Doug Wilkinson had another solid outing, posting scores of 74 and 73 to finish tied for 24th at 147. Senior Brooks Herrick, a Prestonsburg High School graduate, fired a 149. Nick Becht turned in a 156 for the Knights. The Knights will swing back into action Monday in the NCAA Division II Championship Preview at Sagamore Golf Course in Noblesville, Ind.

Rebels visit Pikeville for pivotal game

District title is on the line

by STEVE LeMASTER
SPORTS EDITOR

EASTERN — For a second straight week, Allen Central is set to play in its biggest game of the season. Last week, Allen Central defeated Paintsville for the first time in school history, winning 34-14. This week, Allen Central will face Pikeville with a district championship at stake.

The Allen Central one-two rushing punch of Hunter Crowder and Logan Crowder was too much for Paintsville last week. Offensively and defensively, Allen Central dominated the line of scrimmage.

"It was a great game,"

Allen Central Coach Jeremy Hall commented following the matchup against Paintsville. "We came out and played very hard and stuck to our game plan. I was very impressed by our defensive line play. We were expecting our secondary to try and contain the run and pass. Our defensive line stepped up and played a big part in the game. They got a good rush and made some big plays in the backfield. We played several different line-man up front and each came out and played good football. Bradley Fields, Blake Salisbury, Jon Caraway and Cory Conn, played exceptionally well on the defensive line. Without their hard work the game could have had a whole different look. We also had great secondary play out of Mickey Parsons from the safety position, leading the team with eight solo tackles and three assists. Our linebackers Hunter Crowder, Sheldon Rice and Shane Hamilton all stepped up and played very aggressive hard-hitting football."

Last season, Pikeville managed to edge Allen Central on the Rebels' home field. That game, a district championship and the fact that Allen Central has never defeated Pikeville has fans on both sides highly anticipating the latest matchup.

"We've been prepare for a very good Pikeville team," Hall said. "We are still looking one week at a time. We have to come out and play a good, turnover free football game. We have to play to win."

Pikeville is 1-3 under the guidance of first-year head coach Ben Howard. Kickoff for the Allen Central-Pikeville game is set for 7:30 p.m.

has taken to calling Frosty Davis a history teacher because he too points out the same fact. Pikeville has never lost to Allen Central. Jamey doesn't think that matters.

But if it's a close game with five minutes or so left, it'll be the most important stat of the night.

— Don't tell the guys in the clubhouse, but on Wednesday the Reds were only four games out of third place in the National League Central.

— Says here Kentucky fans shouldn't focus on trying to beat Florida tomorrow — although it would be sweet to see — and enjoy watching one of the absolute great players in college football history. And if you have to ask which one, you don't follow the sport too closely.

— I've missed commenting on something these last few weeks and would like to rectify that situation right here.

I was born in the state of Michigan, and while I left most of it behind when we moved — I mean, I was only five, how deeply could it be embedded in me? — one thing I retained was an interest in the Tigers. And it's been kind of difficult to get terribly excited about them most of the time. I've always been a fan of the voice of the franchise.

Ernie Harwell was firmly entrenched in the Motor City well before I was born in one of its suburbs all those years ago, and in my estimation will always be on the short list of the game's greatest announcers. Listening to him call a game of his beloved "Tig-ahs" was like having a nine-inning conversation with an old friend.

I'm a fan of Detroit columnist Mitch Albom. I'm a follower for former Tiger manager Sparky Anderson. Ask around and you'll find many who aren't. Say something remotely negative of Harwell in Michigan and you'll likely have a fight on your hands.

Recently it was announced that the 91-year-old Harwell has a cancerous tumor in his bile duct and has decided against aggressively treating it. It's heartbreaking, really, that one of the true legends has made this decision. But at his age, he no doubt feels as if radiation, chemo and surgery would be more harmful than beneficial.

A couple of weeks ago the Tigers had another Ernie Harwell Night, and gave him another opportunity to again address the legion of followers he once conversed with every summer's night. He was graceful, he was charming, and he was overcome with emotion. It was Ernie at his best.

It was also tremendous of the Tigers to give him a chance to say goodbye in all probability, for the last time. He deserved it, there's no doubt.

And as a tribute, allow me to close with one of his most famous sayings, a phrase he'd often turn when a player took a called third strike: "He stood there like a house by the side of the road."

Thanks for your time, Mr. Harwell.

At the urging of his young son, Blaise, Randy Frasure put his car back together after a crash in the previous week and went on to win his first feature event of the season on Saturday evening in the Corbin Speedway Super Street Series. Frasure is a native of Floyd County and his father, Randell, who lives in McDowell, serves as his crew chief.

SCOTT LEMASTER (SALVERSVILLE) was a feature winner at Riverside Raceway Saturday night.

Blackcats Tori Hammonds (16), Clara Osborne (4) and Kate Herrick (7) awaited a Pikeville penalty kick in the first half of action Monday evening.

Kinzer finishes sixth in ASLMS feature

TIMES STAFF REPORT

ALLEN — The weekend yielded a sixth-place finish for veteran driver Brandon Kinzer and the Kinzer Motorsports team. Mother Nature drove the Kinzer Motorsports team north to the K-C Raceway in Chillicothe, Ohio, Saturday night. The O'Reilly All Star Late Model Series (ASLMS) sanctioned a $5,000-to-win one-day show at the south-central Ohio venue. Kinzer ran second in heat race action and later drew the pole position for the A-Main.

The Floyd Countian was running strong in the second position behind fellow Eastern Kentucky native Eddie Carrier, Jr. in the main event when the race director called out an inadvertent caution over the Raceceiver. The Allen driver slowed down anticipating the yellow flag period, which never came from the flagman. Before Kinzer could get back up to speed, he had fallen back to the sixth spot, which is where he eventually finished behind Carrier.

UK to host 2013 NCAA Tournament

TIMES STAFF REPORT

LEXINGTON — The University of Kentucky and Rupp Arena were selected to host first- and second-rounds of the 2013 NCAA Tournament as announced by the NCAA on Monday.

Recognizing that 2013 is the 75th anniversary of the championship, the committee selected venues and cities which have served as the backdrop to great tournament moments such as North Carolina's triple-overtime win in the 1957 championship game in Kansas City, Villanova's upset of Georgetown in Lexington in the 1985 title game, the Kentucky-Duke classic in the 1992 East Regional final in Philadelphia, and hundreds of other plays, players and games that are deep-seated in tournament history.

"Through our partnership with Rupp Arena and the Lexington Center, we're excited about the opportunity to host the NCAA Tournament once again, especially in lieu of it being the tournament's 75th anniversary," said UK Director of Athletics Mitch Barnhart. "As NCAA policy precludes us from competing in our home arena during the event, it's a great opportunity for UK fans, and basketball fans in general, to experience the atmosphere of the NCAA tournament. Throughout the years, the Lexington community has shown a strong support of the tournament and, in addition to the historical significance of Rupp Arena, that played a part in being chosen as a host site again."

In addition to Lexington, Auburn Hills, Austin, Dayton, Kansas City, Philadelphia, Salt Lake City, and San Jose were selected to host first- and second-rounds, and Indianapolis, Los Angeles and North Texas were chosen for the regional rounds. One regional site will remain unnamed while details are being finalized.

The 2013 Final Four will be played in the Georgia Dome in Atlanta, Georgia.

and Hall met and planned to stage an automobile accident. Five days later, on June 23, Shumaker rented a U-Haul with money provided by Hall.

Around this same date, prosecutors says Little provided furniture and other household items to be loaded into the U-Haul to give the staging of the collision an appearance of legitimacy.

The indictment then says Shumaker drove the loaded U-

Haul into a 2000 Crown Victoria driven by Little. Newman was a passenger in the U-Haul and Fields and Bentley were passengers in the Crown Victoria, the indictment alleges.

Each count in the indictment carries a maximum sentence of up to 20 years in federal prison, a $250,000 fine and five years of supervised release.

state police.

Hunter said in his statement that Swiney had, according to received information, been transporting and directing others to take various quantities of pills from Michigan and Missouri to Pike County.

One unnamed source interviewed during that investigation said she had been buying pills from Swiney as far back as 2004 at various times and at various locations, including Swiney's home and workplace. The same source also told investigators she had driven Swiney to St. Louis to buy upwards of 800 to 1,000 Oxycontin tablets, saying Swiney would carry a handgun with him on these trips.

This information was used to later set up a controlled buy, Hunter said. Undercover officers met with Swiney in the parking lot of the Eagle Masonry building in Pikeville and bought 27 Oxycontin tablets for $1,700.

Undercover agents conducted three more controlled buys in June and August before Swiney was arrested during a traffic stop along Caney Road in Pike County and charged with drunk and reckless driving. A passenger, Timothy D. Rich, was a passenger of Swiney's at the time and investigators say he was under the influence of drugs and had in his possession Oxycontin tablets. A handgun was also found during the stop.

The search of Swiney's residence and the recovery of the evidence currently being held on Swiney followed the traffic stop.

The complaint filed in federal court Thursday estimates Swiney allegedly imported more than 10,000 oxycodone tablets into Pike County in total, with primary areas of distribution being Pikeville, Shelby Gap, Rockhouse and Regina.

announced that two schools, Betsy Layne High School and the middle school of Stumbo Elementary, were the top in the state for High Attendance Day.

The statewide competition is sponsored by The Kentucky Directors of Pupil Personnel. The event encourages and stresses the importance of school attendance with categories of competition in the elementary, middle and high schools. The two winning schools receive a cash prize that will be presented at the next board meeting.

The next meeting of the Floyd County Board of Education is scheduled for Monday at Stumbo Elementary School in Grethel.

15 deaths on state roads last week

FRANKFORT

Preliminary statistics indicate that 15 people died in 13 separate crashes on Kentucky roadways from Monday, Sept. 14, through Sunday, Sept. 20.

Twelve of the crashes involved motor vehicles and six of those victims were not wearing seat belts. Single-fatality crashes occurred in Calloway (2), Daviess, Lee, Meade, Muhlenberg, Oldham, Pike, Scott, and Warren (2) counties. The crash in Meade County involved the suspected use of alcohol.

A triple-fatality crash occurred in Wolfe County that involved a motor vehicle and a motorcycle. The motorcyclist and his passenger were wearing helmets and the driver of the motor vehicle was wearing a seat belt. The motor vehicle was attempting to make a left turn on Route 15 heading south. The motorcyclist and his passenger were traveling north on Route 15 when the vehicle struck the front of the bike with the drivers side door.

One pedestrian fatality occurred in Marion County and involved the suspected use of alcohol.

Through Sept. 20, preliminary statistics indicate that 572 people have lost their lives on Kentucky roadways during 2009. This is 17 more fatalities than reported for the same time period in 2008.

There were 457 motor vehicle fatalities and 246 of those victims were not wearing seat belts. Twenty-nine pedestrians have been killed. Sixty-eight fatalities involved a motorcycle and 14 fatalities involved an ATV. Fifty-seven crashes involved a commercial motor vehicle. A total of 127 fatalities have resulted from crashes involving the suspected use of alcohol.

September is Pain Awareness Month CONQUERING PAIN TOGETHER!

Physician Credentials: The training for interventional pain physician must provide a foundation of clinical experience where supervised procedures are performed with predictable safety and efficacy.

The only way to evaluate the physicians' training is to verify his/her credentials. Optimally, physicians who practice pain management will have Board Certification in a primary specialty (eg: anesthesiology, neurosurgery, orthopedic surgery, neurology, physical medicine and rehabilitation) and a subspecialty certification (additional qualification) in pain medicine. On completion of this additional qualification, those physicians who are interventional pain procedure-oriented should avail themselves of the examination offered by the World Institute of Pain (WIP), the FIPP (Fellow of Interventional Pain Practice) examination and also the American Society of Interventional Pain Physicians that offers the ABIPP (American Board of Interventional Pain Practice) examination. The ABIPP examination has two parts: Part I is the examination on coding, compliance and use of pain medications while Part II is the FIPP examination. The FIPP (ABIPP Part II) examination requires the examinee to perform four procedures on cadavers and pass an oral examination where clinical case information is discussed in detail while two examiners observe and evaluate the skill of the physician.

Better education and training leads to better patient care and outcome from therapy.

Access to Pain: Pain is a growing national public health crisis that affects an estimated 76.5 million people. More than one-quarter of Americans (26%) age 20 years and over report that they have had a problem with pain that persisted for more than 24 hours in duration. This number does not account for acute pain. Pain affects more Americans than diabetes, heart disease and cancer combined. Despite this prevalence, access to appropriate and effective pain care remains a barrier for many Americans.

Barriers for pain care include:

- limited access to healthcare systems, including health insurance or choice of provider;
- limited access to prescribed pain treatments once within those systems;
- limited access to sites of care or pharmacies that carry prescription pain medication;
- limited access to appropriately trained pain specialists;
- limited pain research funding;
- negative stereotypes about pain patients that prevent early and aggressive treatment

Barriers disproportionately affect women and minorities:

- Medically underserved populations endure a disproportionate pain burden in all health care settings.
- Disparities exist among racial and ethnic minorities in pain perception, assessment and treatment for all types of pain

Improving access to care makes sound financial sense:

- Untreated pain drives up the cost of healthcare
 - Extends length of stay in hospitals
 - Increases emergency room visits and unplanned clinic visits
- Untreated pain indirectly costs loss of wages and productivity of both people with pain and their caregivers.
- American employers lose billions of dollars a year on employee absenteeism as a result of pain.
- American employers lose an estimated $61.2 billion per year in lost productivity among active workers with pain conditions

When pain is treated properly, many people can resume their lives:

- Successful pain treatment is individualized and there is evidence that multi-modal approaches are most effective.
- By improving access to pain care, Americans in pain can receive the services they need in order to lead healthy, productive lives.

People in pain have the right to timely, appropriate and effective pain care.
Let the Dr's. Gutti assist you with managing all types of pain.

MOVIES FROM THE BLACK LAGOON

'Furnace'

A possessed oven haunts a prison that rocks a troubled history, in this better-than-average direct-to-video effort.

It all begins with an homage to those old RKO Pictures. They were famous for using a series of newspaper headlines in the openings of their films to provide the back-story. Here they go with a montage.

Tom Doty
Times Columnist

The camera glides over a scrapbook devoted to the ghoulish happenings that have occurred at a correctional institution. Those who don't mind reading their movies will soon learn that the history of Black Gate Prison goes back to Colonial America, where it got off to a lousy start as the site of a certain lost colony.

The newspaper articles get more current and soon establish that "Black Gate" excels in areas that would inflame liberals. No self-respecting warden is proud of the fact that his or her jail has the highest rate of suicide, but it really burns when the chosen method is self-immolation.

The film does not require reading glasses from this point on, though you will be asked to suspend disbelief as the latest series of events unfolds.

It all starts with a detective

Editor's Note: For years, Floyd County Times founder and former publisher Norman Allen wrote a weekly column that looked at Floyd County through his eyes. His columns have been reprinted due to request.

At this point in time—ever heard that?—I am certain of one thing. The Floyd County Times will not be printed again in Maysville this week.

Morning after the Cincinnati Reds (remember when it wasn't patriotic to call them Reds?) won the western division title. The Cincinnati Enquirer had one of the headlines, I wish I had written. It read:

"How the West was Won."

WARNING

"Now that we've turned to baseball, I rise to remark that if the rumor heard hereabouts turns out to be true, fans should boycott the team. This rumor runs to the effect that the Reds will trade Tony Perez before the 1974 season begins. I'll do my part. I will even threaten to stop thinking about going down to see them play."

Big Sandy CTC students take part in Pinwheels for Peace

by JARRID DEATON
FEATURES WRITER

PRESTONSBURG — The campus of Big Sandy Community and Technical College is currently covered in colorful pinwheels made by the students in the art classes of Tim Smith, and these creations are part of a nationwide project titled Pinwheels for Peace.

"It's really a community project which benefits and brings together students, teachers and children," Smith said.

According to the Pinwheels for Peace website, "Pinwheels for Peace is an art installation project started in 2005 by two art teachers, Ann Ayers and Ellen McMillan, who teach at Monarch High School in Coconut Creek, Florida, as a way for their students to express their feelings about what's going on in the world and in their lives. The project was quickly embraced by their students and the entire school community and by millions of art teachers, teachers, parents, children and adults who desire peace in our world. This is not political. Peace doesn't necessarily have to be associated with the conflict of war, it can be related to violence/intolerance in our daily lives, to peace of mind.

"To each of us, peace can take on a different meaning, but, in the end, it all comes down to a simple definition: a state of calm and serenity, with no anxiety, the absence of violence, freedom from conflict or disagreement among people or groups of people."

Pinwheels for Peace began in 2005, and the displays appear in more than 1,300 locations throughout the world. In 2005, 800,000 pinwheels were installed. That number grew to over 2 million last year, and participants in the project hope to see the number rise even greater for this year, with current estimations putting the number at close to 3 million.

For more information on the Pinwheels for Peace project, including how to design and construct pinwheels, visit <http://www.pinwheelsforpeace.com>.

DINNER DIVA

Breakfast

As you start to get your breakfast on every morning, you will find yourself eating less, feeling better and possibly losing some body clutter off your "bottom line." This is how we start our engines every morning...with breakfast. We all know that if we don't get the car started in the morning, the car goes nowhere. How true this is for our own engines as well!

Keeping all of that in mind, I've got some groceries for you to get with brand names, so you can stock your pantry, fridge and freezer for breakfast. For those who live in different countries than the US, some of this stuff may be hard to find. But a good deal of it you will be able to find or make substitutions for, no sweat!

Here's an easy breakfast grocery list based on some good for you stuff that I like to keep on hand:

For the Fridge: frozen waffles (Van's is a good brand without trans fats, they're whole grain with quality ingredients), frozen berries and fruit (for smoothies; blueberries for lemon yogurt, yum!), frozen concentrated juice.

For the Fridge: yogurts, yogurt smoothies (my favorite brand for both of this is Stoneyfield Farms), kefir, Egg Beaters, eggs, whole wheat tortillas, single slices of 2 percent lower fat cheese in sharp cheddar (great on a muffin. Kraft makes low-fat cheese the best in my opinion), salsa (for breakfast burritos; scrambled eggs or Egg Beaters, slice of cheese and some salsa all wrapped up in a tortilla), butter, cream cheese, peanut butter (if you're buying the right kind of peanut butter, it needs to be refrigerated).

For the Pantry: Thomas' Light English Muffins (only 100 calories and EIGHT

Whooping cough not just for children

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am a construction worker, age 53, and have been healthy all my life. I caught what I thought was an ordinary cough. It stayed and stayed, and it really disturbed my sleep. I would wake up many times through the night, coughing my lungs out. Finally I saw a doctor, who had me get an X-ray, which was normal. He gave me cough medicine that didn't work. I saw another doctor. This doctor took blood and swabbed my throat. I had whooping cough. Isn't this a kid's illness? -- H.C.

ANSWER: In most everyone's mind, whooping cough is a childhood disease, but it strikes adults too. It seems that these days more and more adults are coming down with it.

Childhood whooping cough is a three-stage illness. The first stage, which lasts about a week, features symptoms similar to an ordinary cold -- runny nose and a slight cough. The second stage is heralded by outbursts of violent coughing. At the end of a cough, children draw in air and make a whooping sound. This phase lasts from one to six weeks. The third stage is the convalescent period, where the cough gradually abates and eventually resolves in two to three weeks.

Adult whooping cough doesn't usually go through these stages, and adults rarely make the whooping sound so characteristic of this condition in children. They have a cough, like yours, that just won't go away. Everyone with a long-lasting cough should consider the possibility of whooping cough.

Your second doctor did the test that establishes the diagnosis. He took a swab of the throat (or the nose) and sent it to a lab, where the whooping cough germ was identified.

If caught in its earlier stages, antibiotics can shorten the course of the illness.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have used aluminum waterless cookware since 1958. When I simmer tomato sauces in it, I notice that the pot is shiny afterward. Yikes! Does that mean aluminum has gone into the sauces and into us? Is that harmful? Does it lead to Alzheimer's disease? -- L.P.

ANSWER: Traces of aluminum have been found in the brains of some Alzheimer's patients. To date, there has been no conclusive link between aluminum and Alzheimer's. Furthermore, aluminum cookware releases very little of this metal into the food cooked in it. Most experts do not advise people to stop using such cookware.

Alzheimer's disease is a tragedy for the patient and the patient's family. The booklet on it describes what it is and how it's treated. Readers can order a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue - No. 903W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: What causes skin tags? They hang from my neck and under my arms. -- D.H.

ANSWER: Their cause isn't known. Your doctor can clip them off without any fuss. By age 69, 60 percent of us have one or more of them.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. report from the Detroit Free Press, of a Texas trial, back in 1894:

The dispenser of the finest brand of western justice sat on a soap box with a law book spread before him on an upended whiskey barrel.

"Who arrested this man?" he asked, as the prisoner stood up before him.

"We did," responded half a dozen citizens standing around.

"What's the charge?"

"Hoss stealing."

"Kin you prove it?"

"You betcher life we kin.

We ketchted him in the act."

The judge looked ugly.

"Will you swear to it?" he asked.

"Course we will, didn't we just tell you we ketchted him at it?"

"All right, gents," said the judge blandly, as he laid his gun across the law book. "I'll fine each and every one of you ten dollars and costs for contempt of court in fetchin' him here, and dismiss the case agin the prisoner. You oughter strung him up when you ketchted him."

grams of fiber!! You can spread cream cheese or peanut butter on them for a great breakfast. Thomas' Mini Whole Wheat Bagels (mini is the key word!) Did you know that bagels of today are 30 percent larger than they were back in the 1970s? good whole grain bread (I'm partial to Rudi's Organic Bakery Bread, particularly the 7 Grain with Flax).

I also have a nice big fruit bowl with bananas in it and in the fridge, some fresh blueberries I bought on sale. There's a cool Produce Saver container that Rubbermaid makes that keeps the berries fresher longer (33 percent longer!). Love those berries mixed in

Salome's Stars Weekly Horoscope

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) An upcoming trip could create some problems with your schedule unless you tie up as many loose ends as possible before you head out the door. Ask a friend or colleague to help you.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Being eager to start a new project is fine. However, moving ahead without knowing what actually will be expected of you could cause a problem down the line. Ask some questions.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Getting through some recent challenges in good shape might give you a false sense of security. Don't relax your guard. You may need to be prepared for what else could happen.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Caution is still advised, even though you think you're as prepared as you need to be. Keep in mind that change is in your aspect, and you should expect the unexpected.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) The Lion's gift of persuasion helps you get your points across, even to some of your most negative naysayers. An old friend might seek you out for some advice.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Being sure of your convictions is fine. But leave some room for dissenting opinions. You might learn something that could help you avoid a possible problem later on.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22)

Getting good legal advice on what your rights actually are is the first step toward resolving that pesky problem so that it doesn't re-emerge at a later date. Good luck.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Longtime relationships work well this week, whether they're personal or professional. It's also a good time to invite new friends and colleagues into your life.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) This is a good week to do the research that will help you uncover those irrefutable facts that can back you up on your new venture when you most need it.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Change is an important factor in your aspect this week and could affect something you might have thought was immune to any sort of adjustment or alteration.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Being asked to share someone's deeply personal confidence might be flattering, but accepting could be unwise. Decline gracefully but firmly.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) As wise as you are, you could still be misled by someone who seems to be sincere but might not be. Take more time to assess the situation before making any commitments.

BORN THIS WEEK: You like to face challenges that others might be afraid to, and by so doing, you set an example of courage for all.

Green options for hybrid batteries

by TOM and RAY
MAGLIOZZI

Dear Tom and Ray:
In looking at "green" options for the future, I have a question about the environmental impact of disposing of hybrid car batteries. We live on the Big Island of Hawaii, and currently — to our knowledge, anyway — they do not have a site here that will accept these large car batteries when they are used up. So the question is, Will hybrids really help the environment or are they just creating another mess of a different kind? I would be very curious about your take on this one. Thank you, and love you guys! Aloha, Ginny TOM: It's a good question, Ginny. Based on what we know, hybrids appear to be a net positive for the environment.

RAY: The best hybrids get 50 percent to 100 percent better mileage than nonhybrid cars, and the battery packs seem likely to be recycled.

TOM: So far (and it's still relatively early), hybrid battery packs appear to be lasting the life of the average car. But when one has to be replaced, Toyota, for example, will sell you a new one for about $2,300 and give you a couple hundred dollars for your old one.

RAY: I don't know many people who will say, "Nah, I think I'll keep my old one and toss it in a landfill instead."

TOM: And even when the car is junked, my guess is that the casing, electronics and other elements will have some value.

RAY: Right. Even plain old lead-acid car batteries have value when they're dead. So, automotive dismantlers make a point of pulling them out before the cars get crushed. And I would imagine that there will be at least as big a market for the larger, more complex hybrid battery packs.

TOM: Now, will there be an occasional one that slips through the cracks and gets crushed along with a car? Probably. But we don't see it becoming an environmental disaster, Ginny. You know, like leisure suits.

Are speedometers false advertising?

Dear Tom and Ray,
My 9-year-old son asked me why the speedometer on cars indicate speeds much higher than legal driving speeds. If it is illegal to drive 100 mph (or faster), then why indicate that the car can travel that fast in the first place, not to mention the fact that most cars can't reach these speeds in the first place? I didn't know the answer, so I thought I'd ask a car company. Toyota wrote back with:

Thank you for contacting Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A.,

Inc. We appreciate this opportunity to address your inquiry. Some states within the United States have higher speed limits than other states. We hope you will find this information helpful. Thank you for taking the time to contact us with your inquiry.

Sincerely,
Toyota Experience

Customer

Which was a stupid response. Nissan wrote:

Thank you for taking the time to contact Nissan North America, Inc. and allowing us the opportunity to read and respond to your e-mail inquiry.

All vehicles are designed in this fashion, regardless of make or model. If you are seeking an exact reason as to why vehicles are designed this way, no further information can be provided.

I apologize if the response given is not satisfactory. Unfortunately no further information regarding vehicle/speedometer designs can be offered.

Sincerely,
Nissan North America, Inc.

An equally dismal response. GM and Ford did not respond at all. Can you help answer this question? — Robert TOM: Hang on a second, Robert. I'm just taking some notes. I think we can use some of those response lines in future columns.

RAY: The answer is marketing, Robert. Most of us drive our cars between zero and 80 miles per hour. But by placing a 140-mph speedometer right in front of your face, the manufacturer is suggesting to you that you COULD go a lot faster.

TOM: Right. It suggests you're showing admirable restraint by holding this "crouching tiger" to the speed limit.

RAY: That's an appealing characteristic for most people — to have way more power than you need.

TOM: It's like the ads that show SUVs climbing up the sides of city buildings, or blasting through eight feet of snow at 60 mph. Ninety-nine percent of people use their SUVs to commute to the office and back. But the image of being able to break out of your mundane life is what sells these vehicles. A 140-mph speedometer works the same way.

RAY: It's like my bathroom scale. I may use only 160, but it's good to know I can go up to 350 if I need to!

TOM: I mean, there are some pseudo-practical reasons for doing this. If a manufacturer makes some cars that go faster than others, it's easier and cheaper to make one speedometer for all their cars. But the top speeds on speedometers are still higher than any of the cars can go, and far higher than anyone is allowed to go.

RAY: So we have to conclude it's a sales tactic. Robert, I apologize if the response given is not satisfactory. Unfortunately no further information can be offered.

Rental Central

by TOM DOTY
TIMES COLUMNIST

A good week for mature tastes saw two comedies, one horror flick and an animated film hit the shelves.

■ "Observe and Report" — Audiences expecting another "Mall Cop" yolk-fest got more than they bargained for with this story about a frustrated security guard who suffers from bipolar disorder. The character jumps at the chance to aid a young woman who gets flashed at the mall, but his intentions are suspect and so are his methods (evidenced by the profane beatings he is quick to hand out to pesky skateboarders). The comedy comes from the characters more than the situations in this one and that's evident from the casting, which includes Seth Rogen as the guard and Ray Liotta as a cop who feels saddled with him.

■ "Battle for Terra" — One rebellious teenager takes a stand when her planet is eyed by homeless earth people as a potential colony. This is not your typical animated film since we're the bad guys, but give it a chance and you'll be surprised. The ending is a bit trite but the animation is exotic and the cast is killer. The voices are provided by a bevy of folks you just don't see anymore, including James Garner, Beverly D'Angelo and Rossana Arquette.

■ "Ghosts of Girlfriends Past" — Like many people I avoided this romantic comedy like the plague when it was released. It looked typical and that's because the ad campaign sold it that way. It's actually a thoughtful film about a Romeo who relives his past loves while attending his brother's wedding with the sole purpose of talking him out of getting married. The cast is genuinely good, including Matthew McConaughey as the lothario and Jennifer Garner (well cast as his first true love who he couldn't keep). Better than any Rom-Com starring these two has any right to be. A real bonus here is a hilarious turn by Michael Douglas as the "Hugh Hefner" like uncle whose ghost shows up for a "Scrooge" like tour of McConaughey's past.

■ "Book of Blood" — Two of Clive Barker's best terror tales get merged in this effort about a paranormal expert who lands in a home that is on the path that souls cross on the way to the afterlife. This one gets 1970s-style weird and it's been too long since a film left me scratching my head so I have to recommend it on principle. There's also a cameo by Doug "Pinhead" Bradley, so its got that going for it.

Next week look for a colossal battle of "Monsters vs. Aliens" and check out DC Comics' latest flick, which teams up Batman and Superman in an adventure ripped from their team-up books.

Strange ... but true

by SAMANTHA WEAVER

■ It was British novelist Terry Pratchett who made the following extremely sage observation: "Some humans would do anything to see if it was possible to do it. If you put a large switch in some cave somewhere, with a sign on it saying 'End-of-the-World Switch, PLEASE DO NOT TOUCH,' the paint wouldn't even have time to dry."

■ You probably don't think much about the fees charged at ATMs, but maybe you should start. That $1 here, $2.50 there really adds up — to more than $4 billion every year in the U.S. alone.

■ Do you suffer from prospagnosia? Unless you've suffered some kind of injury to your brain, probably not. Also known as face blindness, prospagnosia is the inability to recognize familiar faces.

■ The Goliath frog of West Africa can reach up to a foot in length and weigh more than 7 pounds.

■ Wimbledon, played in the United Kingdom and one of the four Grand Slam events, is the oldest tennis tournament in the world. It's over 125 years old and about 42,000 balls are used.

■ If you're a fan of the tiny, rubbery candy known as the Gummi Bear, here's some good news for you: The world's largest Gummi Bear is now on the market, available for about $30. The equivalent of 1,400 regular-size bears; the giant candy weighs 5 pounds.

■ The Campbell's Soup paintings by Andy Warhol have become iconic, with collectors paying up to $11.7 million to own one. The very first one ever sold, however, cost only $100. That was way back in 1962, and the buyer was actor Dennis Hopper.

Lagoon

being called in to investigate the jail after a guard commits suicide. It's a riveting scene that sees the young man ignore his "Penthouse Magazine"-style wife and proceed straight to the bathroom after returning from work. The wife is not deterred and coos at the door, saying that it's time to celebrate their anniversary. Her attempts at seduction have an unusual effect, however, and she soon hears a gunshot.

This brings in Det. Turner. He's a tortured soul who is still reeling from the violent deaths of his wife and child who were murdered by a felon seeking revenge on the cop).

Turner is bothered by the fact that the guard was missing several fingers and had hastily bandaged his hand before coming home to take his own life. His investigation soon reveals that there are a lot of things going wrong at the prison and they all began when an old wing was reopened to make room for out-of-state prisoners.

Turner soon uncovers the wing's history and it isn't pretty. He discovers that the wing houses a furnace which figured prominently in the disappearance of a previous warden's daughter.

Meanwhile, people are dying all over the facility from heat-related injuries and those deaths leak out of the jail and begin to affect people working on the case.

It all comes down to a fiery finale that pits Turner against a sadistic guard and a vengeful spirit. It's a lively finish that perks up the picture after a stagnant middle section which fails to address the time-honored question in haunted house flicks — Why don't they just leave?

This one gets by with a mix of talented thespians and tight direction by William Butler.

Mr. Butler knows from horror movies and has appeared, as an actor, in some of the biggest franchises (the apparently got tired of running from zombies, Jason and Leatherface).

Butler's also good with actors and he actually gets a good performance out of Tom Sizemore (despite the fact that the edgy star stormed off the set a few times and was wrapped up in his legal hassles at the time). Michael Pare ("Streets of Fire") anchors the film as Turner and manages to carve a character out of a wooden script (there's a Pinocchio joke in there some; where, but I couldn't find it).

There's also some good gore here, but skip the last 10 seconds, which hint at an unnecessary sequel.

Best line: "He's got residue in all the right places."

2006, unrated.

Family Medicine

Martha A. Simpson, D.O., M.B.A.
Associate Professor of Family Medicine

Q A couple of weeks ago my right foot started hurting in the middle of the night. It was so bad it woke me up. I had not injured my foot, and it was not swollen or red; it just REALLY hurt. It finally went away after a week or so of taking over the counter anti-inflammatory meds. I didn't go to the doctor but my husband says it was probably a gout attack. What is gout, and how can I keep from ever having another attack?

A Gout is perhaps the most painful form of arthritis. It runs in families and is caused by high levels of uric acid in the blood. Some of the risk factors for having gout are diabetes, obesity, high lipid levels in the blood, kidney disease and alcohol use. Men are more likely than women to suffer from gout, although the disease can afflict anyone.

Your case sounds like a textbook description of a gout attack: occurring at night, extremely painful and located in the foot. While gout can occur in any joint in the body, it strikes the knuckles of the big toe most frequently, followed by ankle joints. Gout can also affect the knee, and wrist joints and fingers are also occasionally affected. Gout generally only affects just one side of the body at a time.

For most people, the pain of gout is so severe that they end up in the emergency room in the middle of the night, or come into the doctor's office at first light. A cortisone shot can help calm things down, and so can a prescription for powerful anti-inflammatory medication. However, prevention is the key to managing gout.

Gout occurs when too much uric acid builds up in the blood. Uric acid can harden into small crystals that lodge in joints, causing the severe pain and inflammation associated with the disease. Uric acid is the byproduct of foods that are high in purines. Purines are found in many foods, but especially in protein-rich foods.

Gout attacks can often be controlled through diet

Most people can eat a small to moderate amount of high-purine foods without precipitating a gout attack. But if you are prone to gout, foods like meats, liver and kidneys (sometimes called "sweetbread"), and seafood should be eaten only very moderately and in limited quantities. Although the reason is unclear, some high-purine plant products, like spinach, peas and beans do not seem to elevate the uric acid level of the blood.

Alcohol also is known to elevate uric acid levels, leading to a gout attack, so gout patients should avoid alcoholic beverages.

If you have only experienced one isolated gout attack, long-term medication is usually not recommended, but the dietary modification I have described above is advisable. If you suffer chronically high levels of uric acid or frequent gout attacks, consult your family physician. He or she may want to consider long-term medications in order to lower your uric acid levels and prevent ongoing attacks.

Local student receives Presidential Scholarship at University of the Cumberlands

WILLIAMSBURG — The University of the Cumberlands has announced that 47 students, one of whom is a resident of East Point, have been named recipients of the 2009 Presidential Scholarship.

Brittany Holliman, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kevin Scott Holliman, is pursuing a major in biology.

To be eligible for the scholarship, an incoming student must demonstrate outstanding scores on either ACT or SAT, with a high school GPA of 3.75 or higher.

Located in Williamsburg, University of the Cumberlands is an institution of regional distinction, which currently offers four undergraduate degrees in 37 major fields of study; 30 minors, nine pre-professional programs, graduate degrees, including a doctorate and certifications in education; an MBA; and online programs. UC also offers study-abroad opportunities in England, China, Korea, France and Spain.

Bill and Linda Salisbury, of Martin, announce the engagement and forthcoming marriage of their son, Jonathan Dale Salisbury, 29, of Prestonsburg, to Stephanie Nicole Todd, 22, of Prestonsburg. Jonathan is a graduate of Big Sandy Community and Technical College and is currently employed as a driver at UPS. Stephanie is enrolled at Big Sandy Community and Technical College in the Respiratory Therapy Program where she plans to graduate in May. An open wedding is planned for Oct. 10, at the Fitzpatrick First Baptist Church in Prestonsburg at 5:30 p.m. Following the honeymoon, the couple will reside in Prestonsburg.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO MINE

Pursuant to Application Number 836-5467, Amendment No. 4

In accordance with KRS 350.070, notice is hereby given that Matt/Co, Inc., 439 Meadows Branch, Prestonsburg, Kentucky 41653 has applied for an amendment to an existing surface and underground coal mining and reclamation operation located 1.8 miles north, west of Emma in Floyd County. The amendment will add 178.59 acres of surface disturbance and will underlie an additional 296.17 acres making a total area of 1115.48 acres within the amended permit boundary.

The proposed amendment area is approximately 1.51 miles north from KY 194 Cow Creek Road's junction with KY 1428. This amendment area includes Sand Branch of Levisa Fork.

The proposed operation is located on the Land USGS 7 1/2 minute quadrangle map. The operation will use the contour, auger and highwall methods of surface mining. The surface area is owned by Alma Land Company and Tri-Star Development. The amendment will underlie land owned by Alma Land Company and Tri-Star Development. The amendment application has been filed for public inspection at the Division of Mine Reclamation and Enforcement, Prestonsburg Regional Office, 3140 South Lake Drive, Suite 6, Prestonsburg, Kentucky 41653. Written comments, objections, or requests for a permit conference must be filed with the Director of the Division of Mine Permits, #2 Hudson Hollow Complex, U.S. 127 South, Frankfort, Kentucky 40601. This is the final advertisement of this application; all comments, objections, and/or requests for a permit conference must be received within thirty (30) days of today's date.

Welcome to the fourth edition of Black Diamonds, our annual coal and energy publication. In our fourth year, we have expanded as a publication of not only The Floyd County Times, but also The Hazard Herald. In expanding our focus across Eastern Kentucky, we wanted to bring you a magazine even better than our previous issues.

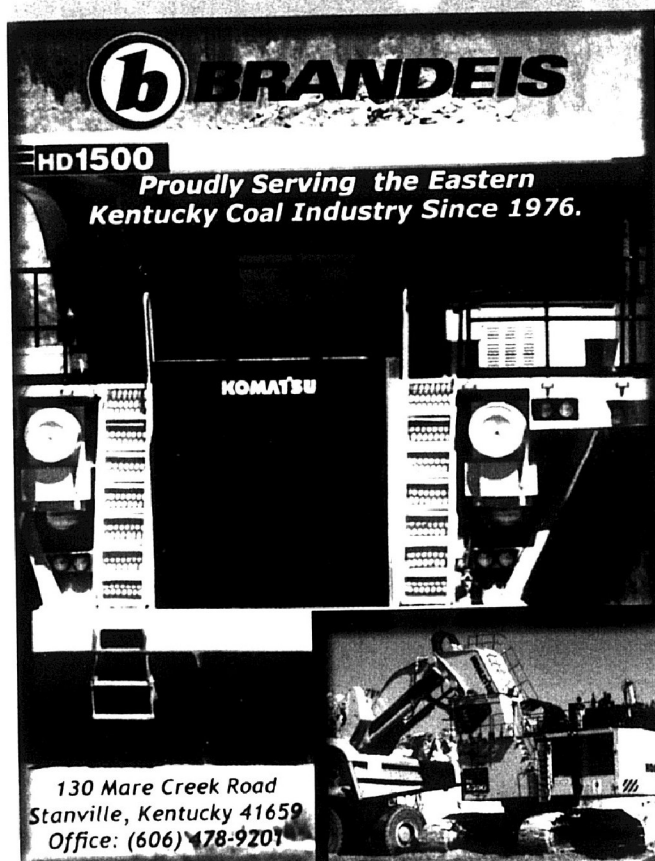

This year's issue continues our focus on the issues about the coal industry, and the way of life surrounding it. With coal safety at the forefronts, we look at a life-long miner's journey below the surface. The big debate this year is on the centerspread and laid out for everyone as former Gov. Paul Patton and Ron Eller go toe-to-toe.

Finally, for a walk down memory lane, we have included historical photographs again this year. We offer our heartfelt thanks to those who entrusted us with their treasured photos, so that we could share them with all of our readers.

'The good Lord's been good to me'

by Tonya Amburgey

With the noises of the belt and other machinery echoing throughout the mine, dust and water, in some instances, along with some tight locations and the possibility of an accident like roof falls some people would think of being an underground coal miner as a harsh, dangerous occupation, but Steve Hacker says it's a good living and he wouldn't have it any other way.

"It's a good living. I make good money at it. Where can a person go and make almost a hundred thousand dollars a year not having no more than a high school education?" Hacker, a superintendent with Perry County Coal asked. "I'm thankful for my living. The good Lord's been good to me."

Hacker graduated from high school in 1989 and went into the mine in February of 1990 and during his nearly 20 years underground he says a lot of things have changed especially when it comes to safety and technology.

"The fundamentals of mining have changed somewhat since I've been into it. You see a lot of different safety aspects that have been enforced and the companies have taken a lot of safety upon themselves," he said.

Safety aspects and laws limiting the amount of dust that is allowed in the air across the sections, having refuge chambers or safe havens set up throughout the mine, as well as having fresh air in the mine at all times are a few things he noted along with the measures that have been in place since or before he went into the mine such as the law requiring all men to wear a self contained self rescuer and having more than one way out of the mine in the event of an accident.

secondary entryway into the mine, these openings have a continuous line, a line that is suspended from the ceiling and marked with reflectors, running through the mine to these two openings to help the men find their way out in the event of an emergency.

The men are also equipped with gas detectors that detect how much gas is in the air. Hacker said they become concerned when the detector reads 1 percent or more, but on Thursday about 1.3 miles into the mine and 250 feet under the earth, in a section that had between a 60 and 70 inch height clearance surrounded by a 30 inch coal seam, the meter read one-tenth of a percent where Johnny Fields and Jimmy Combs were using a double head roof bolter to install roof bolts.

The machine is one of several technologically advanced pieces of equipment that can be found in an underground coal mine and it is equipped with safety features as well. It's two large metal arms raise up and support the roof while it's drill makes a hole in the roof, then the glue is inserted and finally the bolt with the plate on it are put into place. The bolts, which are strength tested as to the amount of down pressure they can withstand, are used to create a bridge that supports the roof.

Fields, who has been installing roof bolts for five years, and Combs, for 14, say they have one of the most important jobs in the mine because they have to make sure the roof is stable.

"After being familiar with it they can tell you when they hit a crack before they find it. They can tell you more about the stability of the roof than anybody on the section because they are drilling through it everyday. They've got a very important job these guys have," Hacker said.

Steve Hacker a mine superintendent with Perry County Coal, waited for the man trip, which was inside the mine at the time, to pick him up so he could take some supplies to the men inside last Thursday morning. Hacker began working underground straight out of high school.

Hacker says even though the occupation isn't easy, the roof bolter along with the other pieces of equipment such as the scoop and continuous miner have taken some of the manual labor out of the job.

The days of the pick and shovel are gone as they have been replaced by a battery operated scoop, that is capable of hauling 12 tons of coal in one load, and the remote controlled continuous miner with its large rotating head containing hundreds of teeth, that can fill a scoop with eight tons of coal in about 21 seconds.

Clellan Hensley, with Perry County Coal said the technology along with the safety measures are the biggest changes he's seen since he went into coal mining 35 years ago as well. He said that when he first started they used the drill and shoot method and now the equipment is more modern and more of it is computer operated while Hacker reiterated that by saying, "It's a lot safer now than when I started. I feel just as safe working down here as I do driving down the Daniel Boone Parkway."

Hacker says a normal day for a miner on first shift at what is called their E-4-2 mine involves them arriving at the mine site around 5:15 or 5:30 in the morning with their shift starting at 6 o'clock when they will get on the man trip, a passenger train car-like, metal vehicle with a low ceiling on a rail, and go down the 16 percent slope into the mine, a trip that takes about 7 minutes with the man trip operating at high speed. From there they get on the rail runner, another vehicle on a rail that can haul 15 miners, and ride through the rock dusted mine to the section where the coal is being extracted and start to work according to what their job is, which could be anything from a scoop operator, car driver, or miner operator to a section foreman, roof bolter, belt shoveler, diesel mechanic or an electrician. The rock dust is used to coat the ceiling, walls, and floor to help with visibility and reduce the contents of a methane explosion, Hacker pointed out.

Hacker said he's held a variety of jobs during his time underground including everything from shoveling belts, and doing belt work and maintenance type work to running a scoop, the roof bolter, continuous miner, bridge carriers, and cars, to being a mine foreman and his current job of superintendent.

And Even though Section Foreman Rodney Kilburn admits that it isn't a clean job, as they deal with dirt, mud, and coal and rock dust, he says, "There ain't but one thing I would rather do and I can't make a living fishing," while Director of Operations for Perry County Coal Paul Jackson added, "We all want something that is clean. If there was something better we'd be all for it."

Arkansas student's work focuses on coal camps

by SHELDON COMPTON

WHEELWRIGHT – The interest in the prominent role that coal mining has had for Floyd Countians does not stop with locals and those who have lived in the coal camps.

Just ask Arkansas student Lisa Perry.

Talking to her, hearing her enthusiasm for the city of Wheelwright and its residents, you might think Perry was a lifelong resident herself with generational ties to the city.

But Perry is a native of West Virginia and a doctoral candidate at Arkansas State University. Her ties and love for the city are relatively new, and also a source of her studies.

"I kind of new what I wanted and I started looking for communities," said Perry. "A fellow in Whitesburg had mentioned two or three places and Wheelwright was one of them."

What started out, then, as a subject for her dissertation became a nearly two-year stay in the city and direct involvement with the continued growth of Wheelwright.

The dissertation Perry says is less than 100 pages long at this point, will focus on the Wheelwright of the 1920s and 1930s, before the coal company entered the picture. The true crux of the work, says Perry, will be the incredibly positive shift the city took after Inland

"There's always an interest in things about Wheelwright, especially among people who grew up here and it was a very well off community."

Arkansas student Lisa Perry

Steel came into the picture.

"At one time Wheelwright was a very violent community before the 1930s," she said. "It was a place where they mopped up the blood on Monday morning. It wasn't this wonderful, beautiful place it has become then."

The change that occurred in the city after Inland Steel moved in is the focus of her dissertation, but lately Perry has been concentrating more on another project that started up about a month ago.

"Someone asked me if I would be making anything that would be available to people," said Perry. "There's always an interest in things about Wheelwright, especially among people who grew up here and it was a very well off community."

The idea now is to put together a pictorial history of not only the model coal camp of Wheelwright, but other camp towns throughout the county.

"I knew the dissertation would be written for an academic audience and that it might not be accessible for everyone," she said. "So the idea for the pictorial history was started."

Now Perry is encouraging people to share their photographs from around the county to be included in the book, which will have accompanying text for the photographs. And, for now, Perry will continue to live in Wheelwright, but that will soon change, she said.

"I have been here for a year and half and I've written under 100 pages," Perry said. "I'm going to have to go back to campus sometime in the next month or two."

Perry first started her visits to Wheelwright as monthly visits to the city from Arkansas and soon become more closely involved. For the past year and a half she has oversaw day-to-day operations at the Wheelwright Historical Society. But she must soon leave that post, which she has volunteered at during her time in the city.

"Once I leave here, I'm not gone for good," Perry said. "I'll be driving back and forth on a regular basis. I just won't be residing here. This place has been an amazing experience and working with the historical society has allowed me to get insight on the people who have remained here after the coal company left I would have never had otherwise."

Those who may have photographs they would like to share with Perry for the upcoming book can reach her by email at lisa@coaltowns.net. Twenty percent of the total sales from the book will go back into the historical society, Perry said.

Coal Miner's daughter never forgets her roots

Loretta Lynn was born in Butcher Hollow (pronounced "Holler"), on April 14, 1934. The second of eight children born to Ted and Clara Webb, Loretta was welcomed with open arms, by the young couple. With her parents blessing and encouragement young Loretta soon found her voice and a place where it would be appreciated. During the first twelve years of her life, she sang in churches and at a variety of local concerts.

At age thirteen, Loretta married Oliver "Mooney" Lynn. Within the first few months of marriage, Mooney and Loretta's brother, Jay Lee Webb, Jr., hitchhiked to Washington looking for work. Thirteen year old pregnant Loretta stayed behind until Mooney sent money and a train ticket several months later. Settled into a new state, fourteen year old Loretta gave birth to her first child, Betty Sue, in Custer, WA. As a young mother and housewife, Loretta stopped singing publicly and shared her passion for music with her young daughter, singing to her regularly.

By the time she was seventeen, Loretta had four children. Inspired by his wife's vocal abilities, Mooney bought her a guitar on her eighteenth birthday, and Loretta began to teach herself to play. Within a few months, Loretta was writing her own music and with her husband's encouragement, she began singing with a local band on the weekends.

Loretta's big break came when Mooney entered her in a local talent contest. Not only did she win, but she also received a personal invitation from Buck Owens to perform on his television show. This was only the beginning of a ground-breaking career for Loretta which included numberless hit records and countless personal appearances.

Today, Loretta is a successful businesswoman who owns her own music publishing company. She also owns and operates a Dude Ranch and campground in Hurricane Mills, Tennessee, which features a plantation-style home and an exact replica of her childhood home.

Crystal Gayle is Loretta Lynn's baby sister. Crystal was the youngest of eight children and the only one not born in the little cabin at Butcher Holler. Crystal jokes that her mother sensed she'd have trouble out of her and that's why she decided to give birth to her in the hospital.

Born Brenda Gayle Webb,

Crystal changed her name at the suggestion of her older sister Loretta, since there was already a "Brenda Lee" in the music industry. Complete with a brand new name, Crystal began a recording career envied by many.

One of Crystal's most beloved songs, "Don't it Make My Brown Eyes Blue", made her a household name from Louisville to Leningrad. Thanks to this song, Crystal became CMA's "Female Vocalist of the Year" for two consecutive years, and became a Grammy Award Winner for "Best Female Vocal Performance."

No matter how many awards she's won, Crystal never has forgotten her roots. She remains attached to the area in which she was rocked on the porch and sung to as a child.

Patton, Eller disagree on coal's importance

BY JOHN JAMES SNIDOW

When Lyndon Johnson declared war on poverty from the front porch of an unemployed Kentucky coal miner, three of every five families in Eastern Kentucky lived in poverty, and children ate chimney soot to ward off hunger. While considerable progress has been made since, Appalachia is still the nation's poorest region, and Appalachian Kentucky has more persistently poor counties than any other state.

The peculiar circumstances of Eastern Kentucky -- vast stores of mineral wealth, a fabled history of cultural and artistic achievement and a virtually all-white population -- have long drawn the interest of public figures and social activists. Robert Kennedy in 1968, Bill Clinton in 1999, John Edwards in 2007: each journeyed here in search of answers. But Johnson's poverty war has devolved into a series of local skirmishes, the idealism of the past has faded and discussion of the future brings uncertainty and debate.

University of Kentucky historian Ron Eller, author of the recent Appalachian history Uneven Ground, argues that tourism and other industries could replace coal mining and lead to greater prosperity. But former Gov. Paul Patton of Pikeville, now back in the mining business, says the region cannot support its current population without coal. Recent reports showing less recoverable coal in the region than presumed have only intensified the longstanding debate and made more urgent the answer to the old question, "What do we do when the coal is gone?"

In his keynote address to the East Kentucky Leadership Conference in April, Eller said he saw "growing potential for local and regionally coordinated tourism." He acknowledged in an interview that Kentucky has precious few "mountain vistas" like those in Tennessee and North Carolina, but the region could still have "cultural tourism based around folk traditions, music or arts and crafts." Eller also says the region could support summer camps, mountaineering sites and weekend escapes for young professionals who live in Kentucky's cities.

Eller is among those who want to wean Appalachia from its historical

"There's not an alternative source of base income aside from coal. Transfer payments will be a source of income, but it will be a much older society. There will be lots of abandoned buildings, schools, houses."

Former Gov. Paul Patton,

dependence on coal. "We have to do two things," he said when asked about the future of the Appalachian economy: "Look for other alternatives [to coal mining] and stop limiting those alternatives by destroying the terrain." In order to ready the region for transition to tourism, Eller urges the state to "stop giving out permits to surface mines above 2,000 feet" above sea level -- an act that would end most Eastern Kentucky strip mining.

The Mountain Association for Community Economic Development, based in Berea, says promotion of entrepreneurship and "microbusinesses" with five or fewer employees is the key to the region's economic future. MACED President Justin Maxson argues, "If you add just one job at 10 percent of the microbusinesses in Kentucky, that's 5,800 new jobs in the state," and current economic-development strategies "overlook an important swath of entrepreneurship in the mountains."

For decades, the best-known entrepreneurs in the Appalachian coalfield were coal operators. Paul Patton was one. Eight years in Kentucky's highest office has made him less optimistic -- or as he puts it, more realistic -- about a non-coal economy.

Patton was never a strip miner, but says surface mining isn't an obstacle to economic diversification. "It's a trade-off," he says, holding up his hands like a pair of scales. "You can't have a modern society and a pristine environment. You can't say you want all the benefits [of development] and then ban something every time human life is affected. You just can't."

Patton dismisses Eller's visions of tourism for the region. Leaning over his desk as if to indicate he'd answered this question before, he said, "Travel has a minor -- and I mean minor -- place in our economy. People in Cleveland don't want to come to Eastern Kentucky for vacation. We're too heavily populated, for one." Nor does Patton think that other parts of Appalachia, those without coal, serve as a realistic guide: "People ask, 'Why can't we just be like Gatlinburg?' ... Well, there's already a Gatlinburg and we don't need two of them." Unlike coal, says Patton, "Tourism is just not viable as a base industry."

Asked about his own administration's progress on Appalachian development, he sat back in his chair for a moment. "Well," he smiled, "it's a lot harder than I expected. I didn't really get the results I wanted." Pressed to say what happens when the coal runs out, he was frank. "Virginia City," he said, naming the Nevada boom town that became a ghost town when its silver ran out.

Without mining in Eastern Kentucky, "The population will be severely decreased," Patton said. "There's not an alternative source of base income aside from coal. Transfer payments will be a source of income, but it will be a much older society. There will be lots of abandoned buildings, schools, houses." Asked if he meant to paint such a bleak picture, Patton shrugs his shoulders sadly, "Well, once the coal goes away, I just don't see what you do to keep the show goin'."

Sissy Cawood of Pineville, who helped oversee Family Resource and Youth Services Centers during the Patton administration, is also skeptical. "We have to come to terms with the fact that for much of Appalachia situated away from I-75 and any other major thoroughfare, there is not much hope for attracting industry," she says. "The infrastructure is in place in every little town and county with industrial development sites ... but still they sit idle."

Still, Eller maintains, "public resources have not gone toward looking for an alternative to coal mining" for economic development in Eastern Kentucky.

Though they have different visions of Appalachia's post-coal potential, when asked to identify the biggest impediment to economic development, Eller and Patton both responded with a single word: "education." Cawood agrees, and says the push for job creation too often obscures the more basic problem. "When I hear county judges and chamber of commerce types speaking, it's not about our education system," she says. "It appears to me that they do not understand the connection between education and any kind of development or jobs-producing success in the region."

Unfortunately, most young people who leave Eastern Kentucky for a college education never come back. Patton said the "brain drain" in the region is "the same as in the cities. Once you get a core of poverty established, it's hard to get rid of and the distillation process starts. The less competent will stay near home where they feel more comfortable while the talented will leave." Eller agrees: "Without opportunities economically, it is easy for young people to lose a sense of purpose, especially when their options are (a) leave or (b) make do in a depressed area."

Besides education, Eller and Patton agree on at least one other thing: Local leadership is crucial. As Eller put it, "The greatest tragedy in Appalachia today is the absence of leadership that really has a vision for the future of the region -- and for the survival of its people."

Patton seems to agree. As he pointed out the modern amenities of Pike County, he was asked if other mountain counties are as nice. He grinned and responded with a joke -- a telling one. "No," he laughed, "the other counties aren't nearly this nice. But you have to remember -- none of those other counties have ever had a governor."

He is a graduate of Paul Blazer High School in Ashland and Harvard College, with a degree in economics. He can be reached at Snidow@gmail.com. This is the first of a series of articles about economic development in Appalachia, distributed by the Institute.

Our View

The middle path

The accompanying story represents two divergent viewpoints on the future of Eastern Kentucky, particularly in relation to coal mining.

On one side is Ron Eller, a University of Kentucky history professor who ruffled a few feathers earlier this year when he called for an end to surface mining during a speech before the East Kentucky Leadership Conference. Appalachia would be better off, he argues, if it focused on diversifying its economy through tourism and other industries.

On the other side is former Gov. Paul Patton, who made no bones about a future without coal mining. Patton paints a bleak picture of an Eastern Kentucky without mining, comparing it to a ghost town. Without coal, he said, there is no future for the region.

So who was right? That, of course, is a matter of opinion, but we have ours.

Both men are right, to a degree. And similarly, both men are also wrong.

Eller is correct in saying that Eastern Kentucky needs to diversify its economy. That is not necessarily an argument against coal mining, although we are certain he intends it to be. It's just good economic practice.

Eastern Kentuckians know well the dangers of depending too heavily on a single industry. They've seen it firsthand in the rise and fall of the coal markets, as the fortunes of families have risen and fallen with each boom and bust. Diversification would only help the region weather the ebb and flow of circumstances beyond our control.

But we are highly skeptical of Eller's view that tourism could play a large role in weaning Appalachia from coal. After decades of spending millions of dollars on attractions to draw tourists to the region, with only modest success, it should be quite obvious that tourism will only play a secondary role in developing Eastern Kentucky beyond a single-industry society.

The big payday promised by tourism is quite literally a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

You can chase it all you want, but you will only end up running around in circles.

And that is why Patton is correct in saying that there is no economy in Eastern Kentucky without coal -- at least for the foreseeable future. Quite simply, no other industry in Eastern Kentucky, current or proposed, can produce as many jobs or as much wealth for local residents as coal.

But the coal industry also needs to recognize that the world is changing and coal must adapt with it. Concerns about global warming and other environmental issues are pushing the world slowly but inexorably away from fossil fuels and toward renewable sources of energy. In the grand scheme, it is irrelevant whether such efforts as the cap-and-trade bill currently before the Senate succeed or not. The bigger picture is that the world has already expressed a desire to begin moving away from coal. That is not a statement for or against the industry; it's a simple, uncomfortable fact, and fighting against it makes it no less true.

Perhaps the only reason coal continues to enjoy prominence among the nation's energy infrastructure is that alternative, renewable sources of energy -- wind, solar, hydrogen -- are thus far too expensive and too inefficient to adapt to widescale use. Once technology catches up, however, Eastern Kentucky had best be prepared.

Coal could also lengthen its lifespan by embracing change. Research and technology work both ways, and the industry would be better served by working to improve clean coal technology and develop more environmentally friendly ways to extract the mineral from the earth. And the coal companies could protect their futures by diversifying into alternative energy, making the construction of wind farms or solar arrays part of reclamation efforts.

There is no question: For now and for at least the next generation, our region needs coal. At the same time, state and local leaders need to be proactive in preparing for a day when coal is no longer king. Standing steadfastly against the tide of history will only result in Eastern Kentucky being left behind.

Beshear energy plan: Coal-to-liquid

by SHELDON COMPTON

A comprehensive energy plan set out by Governor Steve Beshear last year seeks to cut greenhouse emissions by 20 percent and create 40,000 in the energy industry.

None of this can be done by turning an eye away from coal, the state's top crop so to speak for generations.

The key to keeping coal in play during a time when coal has been getting hit hard by environmentalist groups with a bone to pick?

Coal-to-liquid.

It's the new catch phrase in the coal industry and, therefore, throughout Kentucky as well. Part of Beshear's energy plan revolves around expanding research into carbon capture and sequestration in addition to the development of large coal-to-liquids industry. The plan proposes a goal of 50 million tons of coal used per year to produce some 4 billion gallons of liquid fuel per year by 2025.

"Kentucky can be a national leader in energy technology and production," Beshear said short after unveiling the 150-page plan in November. "We can help the country move toward greater energy self-reliance. I intend to put us on such a path."

Coal, which can be converted into gasoline or diesel, exists in sufficient reserves in the U.S. to meet the nation's needs for more than 100 years at current rates of coal consumption, mainly for electric power.

It should not be assumed, however, that there will be enough coal mined to support the demands for both electrical power and transportation fuels. Providing coal-based liquid fuel for transportation would require significant increases in coal mining activities.

The U.S. transportation sector consumes 14 million barrels of oil per day. If coal mining activities in the U.S. increase by 50 percent — an additional 580 million tons of coal mined each year — up to 3 million barrels of fuel per day could be produced. To achieve this, two or three new coal-to-fuel plants would need to be built each year over the next 20 years, the report says.

"A lot of work remains to be done before these alternative fuels can make up a significant share of the U.S. transportation fuel market. Making the transition will require financial investments and technological developments," said Michael P. Ramage, retired executive vice president of ExxonMobil Research and Engineering Co. and chair of the committee that wrote the report. "Newer, more efficient technologies and strong policy measures will be needed to drive market penetration. These fuels will not be cost competitive at current oil prices. They could be competitive with the higher oil prices we've seen in recent years, although it will take focused research, development, and policy efforts to get there."

★ Big Sandy™ Two-Way Communications, Inc.

To the Coal, Oil & Gas Industries:

We have been in business 27 years in eastern KY and serviced companies throughout eastern KY, WV and VA. Since we are a Motorola two-way radio dealer, we have provided communications to many of the companies in your industries.

We thank you for your support, your understanding and your business throughout the years, and want you to know that we support you. Without you, we would not be here. Therefore, we support you with emails to congressmen, senators, tourism, and other businesses that tend to come up with laws to hurt your work and our jobs. We will continue to do so in the future and would suggest that you add us to your email list for all of your correspondence with regard to these issues. We are also here to provide you with MSHA approved radios and intrinsically safe radios, and to add our services for licensing for narrowband and providing new technology to take you into the future.

We will be here, ready to provide our services and products, and hope that you will continue to do business with us. Thank you for 27 years of providing jobs at our facility.

Sincerely,
Lane H. Dutton, President

Coal Trains

Solomon's book looks at often over-looked importance

BY JARRID DEATON

The image of trains hauling coal across Kentucky brings back feelings of nostalgia for many residents of the state who remember when it was the primary mode of transportation for the natural resource, and a new book by Brian Solomon documents the history of coal trains in the nation along with multiple color photos.

According to a release from Voyageur Press, "From the first, U.S. railroads have carried coal from mines to docks, steel mills, and power plants across the country. In this authoritative book spanning the whole of that history, from the mid-nineteenth century to present, noted rail author Brian Solomon explores the railroads and hardware that have transported the fossil fuels that made America work. Brilliant period and contemporary photographs convey the drama of the enterprise: the very long-and very heavy-trains powering up mountain grades and thundering across barren prairies. At sites from the eastern and western U.S., past and present, readers see giant double-headed Norfolk and Western steam locomotives moving Appalachian coal in Virginia; modern CSX diesels dragging unit coal trains over the well-groomed former Chesapeake & Ohio main line; Rio Grande locomotives snaking through the Rocky Mountains; and coal trains working full-throttle up Colorado's Tennessee Pass, cresting the Continental Divide at 10,000 feet above sea level. Taking up topics ranging from the colorful but now-defunct "anthracite roads" of eastern Pennsylvania to today's AC-traction diesels that work Wyoming's thriving Powder River Basin, Solomon reveals how for 150 years the unique demands of coal-and America's demand for coal-have prompted new railroad technologies."

Solomon is the author of over 30 books dealing with railroads.

CAER consortium brings together best minds

by JARRID DEATON

The University of Kentucky's Center for Applied Energy Research team brought together the best minds in the coal and energy industries in order to find a way to produce cleaner energy and continue the rich history of coal production in the commonwealth in April.

CAER created a consortium with government agencies, electric utilities and their research organizations to seek cost-effective technologies to reduce and manage carbon dioxide emissions from coal-fired power plants.

Officials anticipate that Kentucky state government and the industrial partners will provide $24 million over 10 years to support the research.

According to representatives with CAER, the consortium is designed to split the cost of research into large-scale carbon dioxide capture systems, which often has shown itself to be too expensive and high risk for a single utility or government agency to undertake. By teaming the state, UK, several electricity-generating companies and the utilities' national research organization, the consortium will share the costs and risks over the 10-year life of the project.

The founding industry members of the consortium are E.ON US, Duke Energy, Kentucky Power Co., East Kentucky Power Cooperative and the Electric Power Research Institute. Each member will contribute $200,000 a year to the consortium.

The Kentucky

Department of Energy Development and Independence has shown its support with a one-to-one match up to $1 million annually, as approved by the Kentucky General Assembly in the 2008 budget.

State Rep. Rocky Adkins, from Sandy Hook, has sponsored legislation relating to clean energy.

"I am proud to have sponsored legislation that addresses carbon capture research and creates this new consortium," Adkins said. "Kentucky, as a major coal producing state, must stay in the forefront of energy issues and develop technologies to reduce carbon emissions. This collaboration will help us do that by continuing the work of the CAER on an even larger scale."

Because there are many processes needed in mining coal, it is important that all underground coal miners follow proper safety procedures.

Most mines have a dress code which means protective clothing must be worn.

Kentucky Coal Timeline

- 1748 - First recorded United States coal production
- 1750 - April 13th, Dr. Thomas Walker was the first recorded person to discover and use coal in Kentucky.
- 1755 - Lewis Evan's map showing coal in what is now the Greenup County and Boyd County area of Kentucky.
- 1758 - First Commercial U.S. coal shipment
- 1792 - Isaac Shelby becomes the first Governor of Kentucky (1792-1796).
- 1820 - First commercial mine, known as the "McLean drift bank" opened in Kentucky near the Green River and Paradise in Muhlenberg County. 328 short tons mined and sold in Kentucky.
- 1830 - 2,000 tons of Kentucky coal production.
- 1850 - 150,000 tons of Kentucky coal production. Lexington and Big Sandy Railroad proposed. Kentucky Geological Survey established.
- 1860 - Pre-civil war Kentucky coal production record of 285,760 tons.
- 1861 - Kentucky born Abraham Lincoln becomes the 16th President of the United States (1861-65).
- 1870 - Post Civil War Kentucky production decline to 150,582 tons. St. Louis and Southern Railroad completed from Henderson to Earlington, KY.
- 1872 - First train off the Big Sandy Railroad.
- 1877 - Coal mined with steam powered shovel.
- 1879 - One million tons of Kentucky coal production.
- 1880 - Mine ventilation law. First train from Williamson, West Virginia to Pike County, Kentucky. Coal mining machines come into general use. N&W Railroad's first mine at Goody in Pike County. Hopkins County in western Kentucky was the leading coal producer in the state for 18 straight years.
- 1890 - Miner pay law. United Mine Workers of America formed. Machines developed to undercut coal beds. 5,000 kilowatt steam turbine generates electricity.
- 1900 - Child labor law. Edgewater Coal Company's first production in Pike County. First train off the Lexington and Eastern Railroad. Independent Geological Survey established.
- 1910 - First train from the Cumberland Valley railroad. Fordson Coal Company's first production at Pond Creek. Pike/Floyd Coal Company's first production at Betsy Layne.
- 1914 - World War I increases the demand for coal pushing Kentucky production to 20.3 million tons. Short flame or "permissible" explosives developed. Mine Safety Law.
- 1918 - First pulverized coal firing in electric power plants.
- 1920 - Federal Mine Leasing Act. 42.1 million tons of Kentucky coal production.
- 1923 - All time high U.S. employment of 704,793 bituminous coal and lignite miners. First drag line excavators built especially for surface mining.
- 1929 - Stock market crashes beginning the Great Depression.
- 1932 - Walking drag line excavators developed.
- 1940 - World War II - coal production in Kentucky rises to 72.4 million tons for the war effort. Auger surface mining introduced.
- 1942 - Republic Steel Company's first production at Road Creek, Kentucky. Post War Marshall Plan-production rises to 88.7 million tons in Kentucky. Continuous underground mining systems developed. Kentucky Water Contamination Legislation.
- 1947 - Kentucky Coal Association founded.
- 1956 - Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act. Railroads converting from coal to diesel fuel. Roof bolting introduced in underground mines.
- 1960 - Railroads began using unit coal trains. First long wall mining with powered roof supports. Kentucky Surface Mining Legislation.
- 1963 - Kentucky coal production exceeded 100 million tons.
- 1966 - C&O Railroad to John's Creek constructed in Pike County.
- 1969 - Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act.
- 1970 - Federal Clean Air Act.
- 1972 - Kentucky Coal Severance Tax established. Federal Water Pollution Control Act. Kentucky becomes the leading coal production state.
